A diagnosis of dementia or Alzheimer's disease can be overwhelming for the entire family. But where do you go from here? Gathering information from medical experts and your family's physician can help you and your loved ones navigate the emotional and physical aspects of the diagnosis.

Key questions to ask your family's physician:

1. What type of dementia does my loved one have?
2. How far has the dementia progressed?
3. What symptoms and changes should we anticipate?
4. What medications do you recommend?
5. What other treatments may help slow the decline?
6. Should my loved one still drive?
7. Is living at home still an option?
8. In what ways can I help?
9. What specialists should we see?
10. What resources are available to help support my family?
